Assessment and Evaluation

The LINC Curriculum Guidelines promote a communicative task-based approach to language instruction. This means they focus on various tasks (outcomes) in speaking, listening, reading, and writing, that learners are expected to achieve. Learners should therefore be assessed on how well they are able to complete the specific tasks in the Level Outcomes and not on their knowledge of thematic content or specific grammar items. In order to help instructors better understand the assessment process, each Sample Lesson Plan in the Planning section highlights one or more classroom tasks that could be used for assessment.

The activities used for the purpose of assessment should be meaningful, authentic, and require the learner to construct a response, create a product, or demonstrate applications of language knowledge. Traditional methods of grammar and content-based testing should be avoided. The following table lists possible assessment activities for each skill.<sup>1</sup>

Assessing the Four Skill Areas

The method of assessing learner performance differs depending on the skill being tested. According to Canadian Language Benchmarks 2000, the criteria used to assess listening and reading skills are not the same as those used to assess speaking and writing skills.

Listening and Reading

Both listening and reading skills can be assessed by having learners complete a written task requiring them to demonstrate their comprehension (e.g., circling the correct answer, filling in blanks, or answering comprehension questions). The evaluation is then based on how many correct answers the learner has. Canadian Language Benchmarks 2000 recommends using the following scale for evaluating listening and reading tasks:

| Rating | Number of Correct      |
|--------|------------------------|
|        | Responses to           |
|        | Comprehension          |
|        | Questions <sup>1</sup> |
| 1      | Fewer than 50%         |
| 2      | Fewer than 70%         |
| 3      | 70 to 80% (pass)       |
| 4      | More than 80%          |

Speaking and Writing

Speaking and writing skills are more difficult to evaluate because the tasks require the learner to produce either spoken or written language that can be different for every learner but may still meet the requirements of the task. In order to determine if learners have successfully met the outcome, Canadian Language Benchmarks 2000 recommends that learner performance in these skills be evaluated as follows:

Holistically for overall effectiveness of spoken and written communication. Was the learner able to accomplish the task? Overall effectiveness should be given a weight of 30 to 40%.

Analytically according to criteria appropriate to the outcome (see the following table). There are many possible criteria, but the instructor should select those that are relevant to the task (e.g., writing may be evaluated according to organization, punctuation, and grammar, whereas speaking might be evaluated on fluency, negotiation of meaning, and appropriateness). Analytical assessment should be worth 60% to 70% of the final grade.

| Analytic assessment criteria are selected according to the speaking task and the LINC Level Outcome. Some examples are:  • adequacy of vocabulary for purpose • appropriateness of language register, vocabulary, etc. • conversation management and negotiation of meaning • fluency • grammar accuracy • intelligibility of speech • organization of discourse/coherence | Analytic assessment criteria are selected according to the writing task and the LINC Level Outcome. Some examples are:  • adequacy of vocabulary for purpose • appropriateness of text (style, register, layout, visual presentation) • cohesion • grammar accuracy • legibility/mechanics (handwriting, spelling, punctuation) • relevance, factual accuracy, and adequacy of content |
| relevance and adequacy of content  | and place of content   |

Canadian Language Benchmarks 2000 uses an upward scale of 1 to 4 to report achievement of the outcomes. The ratings for evaluating speaking and listening tasks are as follows:

- 1. unable to achieve the competency
- 2. needs help
- 3. satisfactory Benchmark achievement: pass
- 4. more than satisfactory achievement

Recording Information

Sample Ongoing Class Monitoring Charts are included on the following pages for tracking the scores of learners during the course in the four skills (speaking, listening, reading, and writing) within the four competency areas for each skill (e.g., social interaction, instructions, getting things done, and information). Write the assessment task (e.g., doctor-patient role-play, writing a phone message) under the relevant skill and competency area and record learner achievement using the above rating system.

End-of-Term Evaluation

After completing a number of assessments throughout the term, instructors can judge if learners have achieved the outcomes for a particular LINC level and decide if they should be promoted to the next level. A sample End-of-Term Reporting Form<sup>2</sup> is included for this purpose. Instructors may want to use this form to report achievement at the end of a topic or theme by inserting topic outcomes under the appropriate skill and competency areas and then entering the average ratings from the Class Monitoring Charts. See Using the Class Monitoring Charts Reporting Form.

Ongoing Class Monitoring Charts

These charts allow instructors to record ongoing learner progress in the four skill and competency areas. Two monitoring charts have been included: one for Speaking and Writing, and one for Listening and Reading. The chart illustrated below is for Speaking and Writing.

Learner Self-Evaluation

There are many ways to help learners evaluate their own progress. The following is an example of a form that could be filled out by learners after completing a thematic unit. The instructor must choose particular outcomes from the topics to insert in section 1 and vocabulary for section 2. This form should be adapted to the theme and level of the class.

Learner Program Evaluation

There are many ways to elicit feedback from learners about the effectiveness of the program. The following is an example of a form that could be used with higher level learners and should be adapted for the specific information that the instructor is trying to obtain. Instructors may want to develop an additional questionnaire to evaluate the effectiveness of their teaching style, instructional methods, and class management.
